Nina Tran is a partner with the law firm Hoover Slovacek LLP. She obtained a Bachelor of Arts in English from the University of Texas in Austin in 1994 and received her law degree from Southern Methodist University School of Law in 1998. After completing law school, Nina began her legal career in commercial litigation with an emphasis on creditor's rights and debt collection. She has also been appointed by several County Court judges to serve as Special Commissioner on various eminent domain proceedings.

Nina joined the law firm of Hoover Slovacek LLP in 2002 and has specialized in community association practice. She has had the privilege of providing legal counsel to hundreds of community associations on matters that include, but are not limited to, governance-related issues, assessment collection and deed restriction matters, tax-exemption related matters, the impact of federal law on community associations, easement rights, and general and complex real estate and litigation matters. Nina serves as the head of the firm's community association department.

Nina has first-chaired several jury trials to successful verdict and has extensive experience with motions practice in obtaining temporary restraining orders and injunctions on behalf of these associations. In a case widely reported in the media, she recently obtained a favorable jury verdict in favor of Inwood Forest Community Improvement Association whereby a golf course property was declared to be impressed with a reciprocal negative easement for the benefit of such association such that the golf course property could not be developed inconsistent with a green space, landscaping or recreational purposes.
